The First Seven Years

The First Seven Years
This Hal Roach comedy short, The First Seven Years, is the ninety-sixth in the "Our Gang/Little Rascals" series and the eighth talkie. Jackie is in love with Mary Ann and seeks advice from the neighborhood cop, Edgar Kennedy. This policeman suggests he grab her like a caveman, which doesn't work out. When he then suggests he dress nicely, he does but finds Speck taking her for a ride in his toy car. Mary suggests a challenge to a duel since she's been reading a story of one such thing ...

The First Seven Years (1930) - IMDb
“The First Seven Years” is a short story that was written in 1950. It later appeared in Malamud’s first collection of short stories, The Magic Barrel, in 1958. The narrative tells the story of Feld, a Jewish shoemaker who is searching for a suitable husband for his daughter. The story itself is set in 1949. During this time, Jewish immigration to the United States was common, and the world was attempting to come to terms with the horrific results of the Holocaust and World War II.

Short Story Analysis: The First Seven Years by Bernard ...
In the Companion to the American Short Story, Sanford E. Marovitz describes one reason why “The First Seven Years” is so effective: Known chiefly for his imaginative portraits of Jewish characters, communities, and themes, Malamud takes advantage of the Yiddish he learned from his parents as a child and adapts it to suit his aim of being an American and indeed a universal author as well as a Jewish one.

Story of the Week: The First Seven Years
The First Seven years depicted the story of a shoemaker named Feld's desperate attempt to give his daughter Miriam what he thought was a better life and did not attempt to try and find out she really needed. The story shows him believing that materialism is the equivalent of happiness only to find in the end of that he is wrong. In the story Max acts as a representation of materialism because in Feld eyes Max can bring "things" into Miriam's life. Feld's assistant Sobel represents humanism ...
