BEHAVIOURAL RESEARCH FOR TRANSPORT POLICY. THE 1985 INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON TRAVEL BEHAVIOR. Transport policy has traditionally dealt with technical matters: construction of waterways, ports, roads and railways, all require technical skills of different sorts. Also, the construction of networks was often required for strategic reasoning: roads constructed by the Roman empire 2000 years ago and under Napoleon 200 years ago still influence the road network of Europe. Nevertheless, even in ...

The aim is to propose a theoretical grounding of soft transport policy measures that aim at promoting voluntary reduction of car use. A general conceptual framework is first presented to clarify how hard and soft transport policy measures impact on car-use reduction. Two different behavioural theories that have been used to account for car use and car-use reduction are then integrated in a self-regulation theory that identifies four stages of the process of voluntarily changing ...
