Regarding the illusory (or not) nature of democracy, that rather depends on what you expect from a democracy. Nowadays, all democracies are representative, which means there is only democracy when the electorate gets to vote (every 4-5 years in most cases) and even then the real power lies with whoever sets the agenda; like the illusion of choice in deciding how you're going to be tortured, the US two party dichotomy demonstrates this nicely.

Democracy and Illusion by Jonathan Wallace jw@bway.net. We are told from first grade on that we live in a democracy, but most people never ask themselves whether this assertion is true. Is it? Some folks will be very offended by the mere asking of this question, which indicates the depth of the indoctrination we all receive. Today it is more acceptable and commonplace to question the existence ...
