Age: 6-8 years Media: traditional Japanese art Kenji loves the painting of the five geese above his head, but his family must sell it in order to eat. Before they do, he brings it out and flies it like a kite so they can experience flight for the first and last time. When he pulls it back, one is missing.

Kenji and the Magic Geese by Ryerson Johnson

A picture of five flying geese, painted by a Japanese artist over 300 years ago, is treasured in Kenji's home. When floods ruin the rice houses, his family must sell their treasured object in order to buy food. Before the art buyer takes possession of it, Kenji decides to give the birds something to remember--a ride high in the sky.

Kenji and the Magic Geese: Johnson, Ryerson, Tseng, Jean ...

Kenji's family's only treasure is an ancient painting of five geese in flight. Fastening it to his largest kite, he lets the painted geese fly with the wild ones. Magically, each flight alters the picture--a goose disappears, returning during the next flight; mysterious spots appear and ``hatch'' into goslings that ``grow'' and later disappear.
