In 1922 Howard Carter made a stunning discovery - King Tutankhamun's tomb. Crammed inside were over 5,000 priceless artefacts of every type - from gold slippers to finely tooled daggers, the remains of chariots and the boy king's show-stopping solid gold death mask. For the first time in 90 years these incredible treasures are being brought back together as the starring attraction in Cairo's brand-new #750 million Grand Egyptian Museum. Now, advances in modern technology are uncovering new ... Tut's Treasures - National Geographic for everyone in ...

Howard Carter's careful inventory of King's Tut tomb combined with pictures taken by Harry Burton of New York's Metropolitan Museum to reveal the amazing treasures buried with the young pharaoh. Ten years of work cataloging the massive number of items revealed that Tut's burial happened quickly in chambers smaller than usual for the size of his treasure.

King Tut in Dublin. I was watching the first of the Mummy films on television recently (Brenadan Fraser, John Hannah and Rachel Weisz) which reminded me of a piece I had written last April after visiting the Tutankhamun exhibition in Dublin. Unfortunately it also reminded me of one of my worst nightmares: being trapped in a tomb as the entrances gradually close..... Tutankhamun: An appointment ...
