Several ammo type that are very significant were not listed in any of the Palladium Game books. These ammo types including the .40 Smith and Wesson, which is an important law enforcement round, and the .50 Action Express which is a powerful round of interest by many Mercenaries. As well, several different new ammo types such as the .400 & .440 Cor-Bon, the .357 Sig round, and the SS-190 have been introduced recently and are not covered. The author also wanted to add a variety of special ...

They come from all over the Palladium Fantasy world with some ancient while others are ancient and date to even before the elf and dwarf wars. While many of the magic items are weapons, many are not and include a number of practical every day magic items. As far as weapons, the page has conventional magic weapons, holy weapons, and rune weapons. There are even a number of Dragon Slayer weapons.

129 In Palladium Fantasy the rules for shields seem to make no sense, since a shield looses S.D.C. while parrying a strike, while a "normal" weapon doesn't. So why should anyone use a shield for parrying? Perhaps I did not understand the rules. Tell me, if I am wrong and what use shields have (technical, besides role-playing).

83 In the PFRPG: Western Empires book it has rules for magic weapons made by alchemists that states that any weapon can have up to three powers. It seems to me that it has already been established that in the FAQ that a rune weapon does M.D. in Rifts. What I want to know is if the armor piercing power transfers over with the same abilities in as it has in Palladium Fantasy. It seems to me that ...
