Woodlot Management

Woodlot Management

A properly managed woodlot can be viewed as a valuable savings account. Making sure it provides income when you need it involves having an up-to-date management plan and working with a professional forester. Well-managed woodlots represent a commitment to proper stewardship. It takes four or five generations to grow high-quality timber in Pennsylvania. One or two poorly planned and implemented harvests can destroy that woodlot for generations to come.

Woodlot Management » Prentiss & Carlisle

When fuel prices go down, the woodlot can be left to mature, or managed for improved output of other products with an eventual higher profit. However, because of the slow nature of tree growth (for most valuable firewood trees), the profitability of many woodlots must be viewed as a long-term investment, with 20 to 50 years of management necessary before harvesting at a profit.
